ABOUT 300,000 BABIES DIE BEFORE ONE YEAR

The Census Bureau estimates that 300,000 babies died in this country last year before the age of one year, and it is stated that one-half of these deaths were needless if all mothers were strong and infants were breast-fed.

Expectant mothers should strive to increase their strength with the strength-building fats in Scott's Emulsion which improves the blood, suppresses nervousness, aids the quality of milk, and feeds the very life cells.

Physicians prescribe Scott's Emulsion; it is doubly important during nursing. No alcohol. Every druggist has it. Insist on Scott's—the white-food medicine. No advanced prices. Scott & Bowne, Bloomfield, N. J.

"The Frame-Up" SIXTH OF THE NEW STORIES

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS

In Which Is Told the Story of a New York Attorney's Fight Against "the System" That Controls Politics and Stops at Nothing to "Get" the Man It Cannot Control; a Thrilling Narrative.

FOR the first time Mrs. Earle contributed to the general conversation.

"You talk like a fish," she said. The girl turned upon her savagely.

"If he don't like the way I talk," she cried, "he can come across."

Mrs. Earle exclaimed in horror. Virtually her hands were raised in protest.

"Like hell he will!" she said. "You can't pull that under my roof!"

Wharton looked disturbed.

"Come across," he asked.

"Come across," she said. "Send me abroad and keep me there. And I'll swear it was an accident."

Twenty-five thousand, that's all I want. Cutler told me he was going to make you governor. He can't make you governor if he's in Sing Sing, can he?

Altogether worth twenty-five thousand to you to be governor? Come on, she leered, "kick in!"

With grave but untroubled voice Wharton addressed Mrs. Earle.

"May I use your telephone?" he asked. She did not wait for her consent, but from the desk lifted the hand telephone.

"Spring three hundred!" he said. He sat with his legs comfortably crossed, the stand of the instrument balanced on his knee, his eyes staring meditatively at the yellow tree-top.

"If with apprehension both women started, if the girl thrust herself forward, and by the hand of Mrs. Earle was dragged back, he did not appear to know it.

"Police headquarters?" he heard him ask. "I want to speak to the commissioner. This is the district attorney."

In the pause that followed, as though to torment her, the pain in her side apparently returned, for the girl screamed sharply.

"Be still!" commanded the older woman. Breathless, across the top of the armchair, she was leaning forward. Upon the man at the telephone her eyes were fixed in fascination.

"Commissioner," said the district attorney, "this is Wharton speaking. A woman has made a charge of attempted murder to me against my brother-in-law, Hamilton Cutler. On account of our relationship, I want you to make the arrest. If there were any slip, and he got away, it might be said I arranged it. You will find him at the Winona apartments on the Southern boulevard, in the private hospital of a Doctor Samuel Muir. Arrive there both."

The girl who makes the charge is at Kessler's Cafe, on the Boston Post Road, just inside the city line. Arrest her too. She tried to blackmail me. I'll appear against her."

Wharton rose and addressed himself to Mrs. Earle.

"I'm sorry," he said, "but I had to do it. You might have known I could not hang it up. I am the only man who can't hush it up. The people of New York elected me to enforce the law."

Wharton's voice was raised to a loud wailing cry. It seemed unnecessary to say it was almost as though he were addressing another and more distant audience. "And," he continued, his voice still wailing, "even if my own family suffer, even if I suffer, even if I lose political promotion, these laws I will enforce."

In the more conventional tone of every-day politeness, he added:

"May I speak to you outside, Mrs. Earle?"

But, as in silence that lady descended the stairs, the district attorney seemed to have forgotten what it was he wished to say.

It was not until he had seen his chauffeur across himself from apparently deep slumber and cranked the car that he addressed her.

"That girl," he cried, "had better go back to bed. My men are all around this house and, until the police come, will detain her."

He shook the jeweled fingers of Mrs. Earle warmly. "I thank you," he said. "I know you meant well. I know you wanted to help me, but—"

As he walked down the driveway to his car his shoulders continued to move.

But Mrs. Earle did not wait to observe this phenomenon. With the contents of the waste-paper basket, she rushed to the door of her office.

As she entered, two men followed her. One was a young man who held in his hand an open note-book, the other was Tim Meehan, of Tammany.

The latter greeted her with a shout. "We heard everything he said!" he cried. His voice rose in triumph. "And we can't use a word of it! He acted just like we'd oughta knowed he'd act. He's honest! He's a damned honest he ain't human; he's a—"

Mrs. Earle did not heed him. On her knees she was tossing to the floor the contents of the waste-paper basket. From them she snatched a piece of crumpled paper.

"That up," she shouted. "Listen! His chauffeur brought him this." In a voice that quivered with indignation, that sobbed with anger, she read aloud:

"As directed by your note from the window, I went to the booth and called up Mrs. Cutler's house and not herself on the phone. Your brother-in-law looked at home today with her and the children and they are now going to the Hippodrome.

"Stop, look, and listen! Back of the bar I see two men in a room, but they did not see me. One is Tim Meehan, the other is a stenographer. He is taking notes. Each of them has on the ear muffs of a dictagraph. Looks like you'd better watch your step and not say nothing you don't want Tammany to print."

The voice of Mrs. Earle rose in a shrill shriek. "Tim—a gilded saint!" she screamed. "you big stiff! He knew he was talking into a dictagraph all the time—and he double-crossed us!"

(The End.)

This concludes the series of Richard Harding Davis stories. Tomorrow The Herald begins a new series of stories that will run six days each—"The Devil's Darning Needle" series.

Brother and Brotherinlaw Lie "Somewhere in France"

"Somewhere in France" a brother and brotherinlaw of an El Paso woman lie dead while a cousin is in some base hospital with two serious wounds.

Mrs. Enoch Count 1115 North St. Vrain street, has received a message from her old home in Surrey county, Eng., saying that Ernest Lawrence her brother, and Daniel Hancock, her brotherinlaw, had been reported among the list of "dead in battle" while her cousin, Philip Feist, had been wounded during the fighting in Flanders.

Lawrence and Hancock were members of the British regular army. Hancock having been a pensioner before the outbreak of the war. Feist was one of Kitchener's army.

The Daily Novelette THOSE SIX.

Lo, the poor Indian now is seen in movie exacting. And even waxes rich, I wren, At movie netting.

(This week's mystery.)

THE three men, including the one in the middle, looked neither to right nor north as they proceeded down the deserted alley.

Suddenly a small figure, clothed in rags and satin, burst from a narrow passage way and handed a small square of paper, marked with a broken red circle, to the fourth, hitherto-not-mentioned man.

All started back in fear, but the short one said, "But it's only a street gamin!" and they took the bearer of the note and stuffed him back into the passageway, during which operation he talked rapidly in some strange gibberish, apparently half Choctaw and half Bunchebster.

The three men turned the note over a tallow candle and pursued their way, including the two on the ends.

"Halt," cried a deep voice suddenly. At the same instant a sudden voice cried deeply, "The red circle of Arta Gwan!"

The short man seized an ash can, quickly turned it upside down and sat on it, exclaiming exultingly, "Now let 'em try to get out!"

All four laughed heartily, especially the one behind. Their race had succeeded.

PIONEER TEXAS EDITOR MADE TRIP TO MEXICO THROUGH EL PASO

A copy of the Denison Morning Gazette, of Denison, Tex., has been received here with a copy of Col. E. C. Murray's 75th birthday anniversary, which occurred last Friday. Col. Murray was editor of the Gazette until two years ago, and is one of the pioneer newspaper men of Texas.

The account of his life tells of his having made his way through Mexico, alone and without money, by way of El Paso, Chihuahua, Monterey, and Eagle Pass back to San Antonio. There he joined Col. H. H. Hull's company of New Mexico cavalry and served during the civil war in Louisiana and Arkansas.

NEW MAP OF CHIHUAHUA.

E. G. Piper, of El Paso, has just published a map of the state of Chihuahua, on a scale of about 15 miles to the inch. Besides the usual features of a geographical map, this new map shows wagon roads, trails, electric power lines, railroads, protected railroads, mines, pueblos, ranches, and locations of government agencies and district seats of government. The map is a useful compilation entailing much careful work. The map also includes portions of the states of Sonora and Durango.
